National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deep area of low pressure near northwest Scotland will continue to push a swathe of very strong winds across much of Northern Ireland and southern Scotland for a time this morning and early this afternoon, eventually clearing from the south coast of Dumfries and Galloway later in the afternoon.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 08:45 on Thu, 15th Jan 2015 until 16:00 on Thu, 15th Jan 2015

Gale force winds across exposed parts of the north of northern Ireland and southwest Scotland, will spread across many other areas of Northern Ireland and southern Scotland this morning, and may affect some eastern coastal areas of Scotland for a time. Gusts to between 60 and 70 mph are expected in places, while they may reach around 80 mph across some exposed coastal sites.

The public should be aware of the risk of localised disruption to transport and possibly also to power supplies.

This is an update to extend the warning further across eastern Scotland.
